B.C. Accessibility Standards: Transportation sector session

July 4, 2024

As part of ongoing efforts to implement the Accessible B.C. Act, the government is developing new accessibility standards for different sectors, including transportation.

On July 16, 2024, from 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m., the Accessibility Directorate (part of the Ministry of Social Development and Poverty Reduction) is hosting an online consultation session to collect input on proposed Accessible Service Delivery and Employment Accessibility standards in the transportation sector. The goal of these standards is to help remove barriers for people with disabilities in B.C.

Members of the transportation sector and interested parties are invited to join the conversation. Licensees and other members of the passenger transportation industry are welcome to participate.

The Government of British Columbia is working towards being an inclusive province. In June 2021, the Accessible B.C. Act became law. It provides a framework to identify, remove, and prevent barriers to accessibility. The new law is an important step to make B.C. a more accessible province.
